- Mac and Windows have a Greek Polytonic Keyboard option under Greek in Keyboard settings, but combinations for diacritics vary by device. See PDF.
- In a word processor (like Microsoft Word, or an equivalent) you can add more signs than a keyboard allows by inserting "special characters". Go to "Insert", click "Symbols/Special characters" (usually with a Ω sign), select "More..." then search for "combining" symbols. This will allow you to write all the combinations you need (including length + diacritics + iota subscript).

Some useful techniques for learning on your own:

- Multi-lingual texts: use parallel Latin or Hebrew to help keep you progressing, but not relying on translating from your native language.
- Other vocab techniques:
  - Flashcards (Grk–Pictures, Grk–Definition in Greek, Grk–Greek Phrase, Grk–Latin; Don't memorize 1:1 translations, but real contexts/uses)
  - Writing (journaling, weekly writing, summaries in Greek)
  - Make your own contexts in Greek: When else would I see this word? (See other sheet: Level 1 Λεξικόν ἑλληνιστί)
